

Stacy Kalisz Johnson joined Keysight by way of a start-up-acquisition and works out of her home office in Phoenix, AZ. Stacy is a high energy marketing professional that knows how to remove roadblocks to drive business results and is currently serving Keysight as a program manager for Keysight Global Services.

Stacy is the operations manager of a household of 3 athletic boys. She, along with her husband Rich enjoys anything fitness, travel and volunteering. Stacy is a volunteer spokesperson for the American Heart Association.

Stacy holds a BS and MS in mechanical engineering from the Rochester Institute of Technology and a Master Certificate in Project Management from George Washington University. Stacy has been recognized by the Society of Women Engineers with the SPARK Award for her mentoring work and has delivered many talks on resume writing, using informational interviews for networking and on self-advocacy.

Noah Schmitz graduated Summa Cum Laude from the University of Oklahoma with a BS in Engineering Physics and holds an MS degree in Management Science and Engineering from Stanford University. His technical articles have been published in EE Times, Wireless Systems Design, Microwave Products Digest, and Electrical Design News China. With deep application knowledge in the areas of wireless communications, power and energy, and optical electronics, he has been invited to speak at technical symposia including Semicon Singapore, Test and Measurement World Korea, and the European Space Agency Power Conference. Noah is a lifelong learner passionate about education and committed to empowering the next generation of engineers, scientists, and research professionals. His academic accolades include selection as a National Merit Scholar, the Most Outstanding Graduate of the OU College of Engineering, and a member of the PE-ET University Top 10 Honor Society.

